

Michael J. Smith has been chief of the Motivation and Stress Research Section of the Applied Psychology and Ergonomics Branch of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, Cincinnati, Ohio, since 1976. He directs a broad range of behavioral research aimed at identifying job factors related to worker safety, health, and performance. He is also responsible for developing and evaluating motivational techniques for improving worker behavior in those areas.

Smith received a BA in psychology in 1968, an MA in industrial psychology in 1970, and a PhD in industrial psychology in 1973, all from the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Questions about this article can be directed to Michael J. Smith, National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, 4676 Columbia Parkway, Cincinnati, OH 45226.