Service assures availability of software documentation

A new service from Info-gard, Inc., will hold in secure storage critical documentation of a software package, including source code in machine-readable form, and will make it available to the licensee if vendor support fails. The service operates under conditions of a contract among the licensee, vendor, and Info-gard. This service gives software licensees some protection against vendor failure, according to the company. Since complete documentation is seldom supplied with licensed software, organizations have had to be concerned with whether or not a vendor would stay in business and continue to support a package. With this service, if vendor support becomes unavailable, Info-gard can release the stored documentation to the licensee.
