Panel Session

Electronic Forms: Their Properties and Problems
Organizer and Moderator: A. Ellis, Xerox Corporation

Theme: It has been found that users within the office understand and can relate to the sheet of paper called the form. Simultaneously, many workers detest the form. Why is this? Is it a good and useful paradigm for the electronic office? What are problems of its implementation and management? Panelists will explore the definition and nature of forms and will speculate on the future of the electronic form, generalizations of it and alternatives to it. Time will be allotted for general discussion and audience participation.

Panelists: David Embleby, Brigham Young University; Diarmuid Tischriltz, University of Toronto, Canada; Moshe Zlotof, IBM Watson Research Center.

Other Technical Sessions

Database Interface
Decision Support and Query Systems
Petri Net Related Systems Descriptions and Specifications
VL3 Architectures and Languages
