Color plate 1: Results of the ray tracing procedure applied to raw point data. The afarensis (early human) model consists of 150,000 points acquired with a structured light scanner from a physical model.

Color plate 2: Ray tracings of the Stanford bunny data set. The lower row shows the corresponding point sets. Note that even for very sparse point information the resulting image of the surface is smooth.